

CRUSHED A WOMAN'S SKULL.

Lizzie Farrell the Victim of an Unknown Assassin.

Mysterious Murderous Assault on a Red Bank Street.

SECRET TO THE EVENING WORLD.
RED BANK, N. J., April 29.—A mystery was attempted here last night. The victim is Lizzie Farrell, an Irish girl who has been in this country about fifteen years. She is a short, plump, pleasant-looking young woman about twenty-eight years old.

About four years Lizzie has been employed as a domestic by Clifford P. Cornwell, of Broad street. Mrs. Cornwell has been away from home for several weeks for her health. During this period the young woman has been spending her evenings at John Neff's, in West Red Bank.

She left Mr. Cornwell's house as usual last night to go to Neff's. She was accompanied as far as Rogers & Walling's carriage factory on Maple avenue by Mary L. Jones, a domestic in the family of James Cooper.

This was a little after 10 o'clock. The girls separated at the corner of Maple avenue and Meadmoor streets, Mary to go to Cooper's and Lizzie to Neff's.

Lizzie said: "Mary, I'm afraid to go home alone, there are so many transients they won't disturb you." "Don't worry," Mary replied, laughing: "I'm sure they'll be all right."

At 10:15, exactly the bleeding and unconscious form of Lizzie Farrell was found by William R. Frey, who lives at front of his house, on Briscoe avenue.

Physicians were sent for and the young woman was conveyed to Abram Becker's house on the same street. By her side they found a iron-witch rod, about six inches long and 1½ inches thick, with which the murderous blow was thought to have been inflicted. This was taken possession of by the police.

The girl's head was fearfully crushed in. There were two different gashes and her brain was exposed.

One blow had been struck on the back of the head and the other on the right side. Her raven-black curly hair was saturated with blood.

The women did not regain consciousness, and this morning early she was taken to the Central Branch Hospital. The physicians do not think she will live.

The police hunted all night long for the assassin, but their labors were fruitless. The only clue the police have is the iron rod, which was probably taken from the railroad, less than one hundred yards away.

Cyrilus Beckett, who has a law office, says he heard a woman screaming about the time Miss Farrell was assaulted, and, looking out of the window, saw a man run down the street towards the railroads.

Some people are of the opinion that the deed was the work of a crazy. Miss Adele Van Whittle, a widow teacher on Madison street, was struck from behind several nights ago near her home and quite seriously hurt. The ruffian who attacked her was never discovered.

Prosecutor Tylor, who tried her case, and the police will do their utmost to apprehend Farrell's assailant.

It is thought that the motive for the assault was robbery. Miss Farrell had no money up in a paper which was tucked in her bosom. The physician who examined her found the paper, and the money was missing.

STEAMSHIP FLORIDA SUNK.

She Was Old and Leaky, and Was Pending Toward New York.

(See next column.)

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., April 29.—It is believed that no effort will be made to raise the sunken Florida, which sank off Longport yesterday. The ship had not been off New York for 24 hours and was being towed to that port when it struck a reef, causing a hole which admitted water. The crew were unable to stop the leak when it was discovered, and the vessel was bound for New York to get help.

At 10:30 A. M. today the Florida was adrift in the middle of the ocean.

James Gillon, of 342 West Fifteenth street, Walling delegate of Union No. 2429, of the Building Contractors of New York, is to be taken to the Tombs by Detective English of the Court Squad, charged with arson.

The incendiary was made by Captain Wenzel, state police of the Atlantic Ocean.

He and T. D. Webber had in his employ at Seventy-second street and Avenue A, George W. Werner, a master, who was in arrears to the union. Werner received $100 in advances for 24 hours and was later down to that point when he got up his account to find he was still in arrears. He was bound to him by his contract, and that he must pay him what he was bound to him.

Gillon denied the charge and was held for examination.
